

Missing example from page 224. This paragraph is an example missing in some books from page 224 and meant to be under the heading:

Example 2

Heshy's car lease is up. He told his wife Simmy that he's been looking around and doesn't want to spend more than he is currently paying per month, but definitely wants something different. Simmy didn't give too much of a response. She figured that Heshy knows she doesn't like to be flashy and that when Heshy has his eye on something specific, he'll discuss it with her. Heshy finds a great deal on a car that he really likes and does his trade-in, arriving home all excited to show Simmy the new car. When he gets home, Simmy is upset. She thinks the car is too flashy and showy for them, even though it isn't more expensive. She tells Heshy that he knows she has a problem with that kind of ostentatiousness and she can't believe he didn't discuss with her which car he was going to get before signing the contract. Heshy says he told Simmy he was looking and anyway, it's the car he's going to drive, and he doesn't really think Simmy has to like it. Simmy feels that she should have a say in the decision, because it's still their car. She then reiterates how she thinks the car is so inappropriate, conspicuous, etc.